Evaluate

Your team's year in review with Claude in 5 steps

Save this for the last days of December

Prepared by	Christophe Atten
For	Finance teams
Type	How-to

Swipe for the 5 steps

Step 1 of 5

1

Collect the raw material

Monthly reports, project updates, meeting notes, your own list of highlights. Remove anything confidential or personal first.

Prompt to copy Paste your notes.

```
Here are my notes from this year: monthly reports, project updates and highlights: [PASTE]

Organise them by month and remove duplicates.
```

Step 2 of 5

Find the themes

Ask Claude to group everything into four or five themes: what changed, what improved, what was hard.

Prompt to copy Four or five.

```
Group everything into four or five themes: what changed, what improved, what was hard, what we started.
```

Step 3 of 5

3

Quantify the wins

For each achievement, ask: "What metric shows this?" Then fill in the real numbers yourself.

Prompt to copy You fill in the numbers.

```
For each achievement, suggest the metric that best shows its impact. Leave the number as [NUMBER] for me to fill in.
```

Step 4 of 5

Capture the lessons

Ask: "Based on these notes, what are the three most important lessons for next year?" Then challenge them. Some will be wrong.

Prompt to copy Then challenge them.

```
Based on these notes, what are the three most important lessons for next year?

For each, give the evidence from the notes. I will challenge them.
```

Step 5 of 5

Write two versions

One page for your CFO, and a short, warmer message for your team. The second one matters more than people think.

Prompt to copy Factual and short.

```
Write a one-page year in review for the CFO:
themes, top five achievements with metrics, three lessons and three priorities for next year.
```

One rule

> No personal data about colleagues, no performance comments. A year in review is about the work, not about evaluating people.

Free resource

Get the free prompts

Free. The link is in the post.

No signup.

