Evaluate

60 pages to a 1-page board brief in 5 Claude steps

Five steps. Decisions first. Every point checkable.

Swipe for the 5 steps

by Christophe Atten

Step 1 of 5

1

Upload it, then set the reader

“Board members with five minutes and no technical background” is a different brief from “the CFO”.

Prompt to copy Upload the document first, then paste this.

```
I have uploaded [DOCUMENT TYPE, e.g. an internal audit report] of [NUMBER] pages.

I need a one-page brief for [READER, e.g. board members with five minutes and no technical background].
Their decision or interest: [WHAT THEY NEED TO DECIDE OR KNOW].

Rules:
- Use only the uploaded document. Do not add outside knowledge.
- Add the page number in brackets after every key point, for example (p. 14).
…
```

The reader shapes the summary.

Step 2 of 5

2

Ask for decisions first

Decided. Needs a decision. Risks. Next steps.

Prompt to copy The core structure boards actually use.

```
Write the brief in this structure, maximum one page:

1. In one sentence: what this document is and why it matters now.
2. What has been decided or concluded (max 3 bullets).
3. What needs a decision from [READER] (max 3 bullets, each with the options).
4. Key risks and their size, as the document states them
(max 3 bullets).
5. Next steps, owners and dates, as stated.

Page reference after every bullet.
```

Boards want choices, not chapters.

Step 3 of 5

3

Demand page references

A page number behind every key point.

Prompt to copy Makes the summary verifiable.

```
For each bullet in the brief, quote the shortest passage from the document that supports it, with its page number.

Flag any bullet where the support is weak, indirect or missing.
```

A summary you can check beats one you have to trust.

Step 4 of 5

4

Ask what's missing

“What would a sceptical board member ask that this document doesn't answer?”

Prompt to copy Often the most valuable output.

```
Read the document as a sceptical board member would.

List the five questions this document does not answer that a board member is likely to ask.
For each, say whether the answer might be elsewhere in the document, or is genuinely missing.
```

> Often the most valuable output.

Step 5 of 5

5

Edit and verify

Check every figure and reference against the source. Cut anything that sounds like marketing.

Prompt to copy After your own verification.

```
Here is my corrected version of the brief: [PASTE]

Tighten it to [NUMBER] words. Remove anything that sounds like marketing or filler.
Do not change any fact, figure or page reference.
```

> You own the final brief.

Before you start

One rule

Only upload documents your data policy allows in the tool you use. Confidential board material belongs in an approved enterprise setup.

Free resource

Get the 6 prompts

Free. The link is in the post.

No signup.

